Florence Nightingale

Creative Brief, Sydney Strominger

Project overview

- I want to make a website about Florence Nightingale that explains who she was and why her work still matters. The site will have six pages covering her early life, the Crimean War, changes she made to nursing, her use of statistics, and sources.

Resources

- I will use the Florence Nightingale Wikipedia article for the main information. I also want to include historical portraits, hospital illustrations, and examples of her charts. I will look for images on Wikimedia Commons and credit the sources.

Audience

- This site is for students and anyone interested in history or healthcare. I want it to be easy to follow even if someone does not know much about Florence Nightingale.

Message

- I want people to see Nightingale as more than “The Lady with the Lamp.” She helped change how hospitals worked and used data to argue for better care.

Tone

- The site should feel historical and thoughtful, but not too serious or textbook-like. I want it to be clear, interesting, and easy to read.

Visual style

- I am thinking of an old-document or museum-exhibit feel, but with a clean, modern layout. I want to use cream backgrounds, dark green details, serif headings, and historical images. I do not want the design to look overly aged or cluttered.

Layout and design notes

- The homepage will feature a portrait and short introduction. Other pages will have simple navigation, short sections of text, and images with captions. A timeline could work well for the Crimean War, and a large diagram could highlight her work with statistics. The site should also be readable on phones.

Creative flexibility

- I would like to experiment with typography, image placement, and small interactive details, as long as the site stays easy to use and the history remains the focus.
